Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1878 edition. Excerpt: . CHAPTER III. RECENT HISTORIANS OF THE DISCOVERY OF THE CIRCULATION OF THE BLOOD. My work would be incomplete were I not to conclude with a notice of some at least of my predecessors, historians of the Circulation, critics and advocates of one or another to whom the discovery has been ascribed. In exposing the views of the great anatomists of former times from their works, I have referred incidentally oftener than once to recent writers who believe that in these they detect a knowledge more or less complete of the Circulation. Among the most persistent of all in his advocacy of the claims of Hippocrates to such distinction is Jo. Ant. van der Linden, professor of medicine in the University of Leyden. In a series of no fewer than twenty-seven dissertations published under the names of his students on taking their medical degrees,1 he has brought together and given his own interpretation to every passage in the writings of the Father of Physic which he thinks bears upon the question in 1 Jo. Ant. van der Linden. Hippocrates. de Circuitu Sanguinis, Dissertationes xxvii. Lugd. Batav., 1659-63. 4to. hand. But I have said enough under the head of Hippocrates on the learned professor's lucubrations to make it unnecessary for me to take up the subject at any length in this place. I only add, that Van der Linden is totally opposed to Harvey's title to be accounted the discoverer of the Circulation...
